About Famous Fat Dave

Famous Fat Dave was always Dave. He wasn't always famous and fat. Dave proudly added the "fat" early in life while growing up in Maryland. Bottomless cones of Thrasher's french fries doused in apple cider vinegar and countless bushels of blue crabs steamed with Old Bay Seasoning began a lifetime of eating good food until it hurt.

He enrolled at New York University mostly to be near the city's myriad culinary institutions. The first job for which he applied after graduation was as counter help at Coney Island's original Nathan's Famous. Told he was overqualified, Dave didn't get the gig, but in the coming years he landed a number of dream jobs deep inside New York's food world.

Dave drove a bread truck for Orwasher's Bakery, delivering Black Russian ryes and challahs to the likes of Tavern on the Green, the Russian Tea Room, and the World Trade Center. He prowled a stretch of Orchard Street behind an aromatic row of 500 pound barrels as a pickle man at Guss' Pickles. He translated his pickle skills into the cheese realm as a sample-happy cheese monger at Murray's Cheese Shop. He even managed to sell his beloved Nathan's hot dogs in Coney Island, doing so as a bellowing vendor in the stands at the minor league Brooklyn Cyclones ball park.

In the meantime, Dave moonlighted as a New York City yellow cab driver, followed his belly across five continents, and worked as a food writer. His food writing has appeared in Time Out New York, Not For Tourists Guidebook, Attache Magazine, The L Magazine, and Gothamist.com. And Dave himself has been featured in dozens of magazines and newspapers as well as on radio and national television. But it is his critically acclaimed and wildly popular eating tour that is putting the "famous" in Famous Fat Dave.
